- At Kansas Speedway in October 2019: Bowyer started 21st and quickly climbed into the top-10. He stayed on the track at the end of the first stage when the leaders pitted. Bowyer battled through the second and final stages before finishing eighth.
- At Kansas Speedway in May 2019: Bowyer started second and raced at the front of the field, leading 12 laps. Handling issues plagued him until the end of the race, when chassis changes enabled Bowyer to charge to the front and finish fifth. It was his best finish at Kansas in an SHR Ford.

- Bowyer’s heart is still in Emporia, where he’s a big part of the community. In March 2013, he bought the Clint Bowyer Autoplex car dealership on U.S. Highway 50, where he once worked as a lot attendant, dent specialist and detailer. Across the street sits the Clint Bowyer Community Building, constructed in 2012 thanks to a $1.5 million donation from his foundation. Inside are 25 computers at the public library. There is a scoreboard at the aquatic center, a video camera at the auditorium, shoes for the Big Brothers-Big Sisters program, backpacks for kids, Christmas trees for needy families. And, in nearby towns, playground equipment and the reconstruction of a tornado-ravaged community center – all of it and more paid for by Bowyer’s foundation, or out of the driver’s own pocket. Emporia appreciates its native son, having renamed the street on which the family towing business resides as “Hon. Clint Bowyer Boulevard.”
- Emporia, Kansas is a town of 25,000 residents about a 90-minute drive southwest of Kansas Speedway. Emporia is also a college town, home to Emporia State University and Flint Hills Technical College. In 1953, Emporia was the site of the first Veterans Day observance in the United States. At the urging of local shoe cobbler Alvin J. King, U.S. Representative Edward Rees introduced legislation in the United States Congress to rename Armistice Day as Veterans Day. President Dwight D. Eisenhower signed the bill into law on Oct. 8, 1954.
